

Meet the Stakeholders

For every issue, there are number of groups that have deep and durable connections at the practice level. Some are very closely aligned with the issues that you are trying to influence. Others have more distant, but still important, connections. In either case, stakeholder groups have influence in what practitioners know, believe and do. Stakeholder groups can be important allies in moving practices into practice! We encourage state staff to identify and reach out to their potential partners in meeting persistent challenges.

Type of Partner	Partner Name	Contact Information
Groups and organizations that represent those responsible for directly involved with implementing this practice
Groups and organizations that represent individuals with authority over the environments where this practice must be implemented
Groups and organizations with influence over the practitioners and consumers that care about this issue
Other...
Other...
Other...		